Hi Stirrer. The forum was down for most or all of the summer. It just came back up this week, so it will take a while for people to notice.

Can't believe it's back up and running! I was actually searching for a different corn burning forum and found that this one is alive!

I still check in from time to time, but I went back to burning wood last winter and will again this winter. Corn is too much money, pellets are 200 a ton around here which isn't terrible, but I got free access to wood so even though it's more work, it's free. The old 6220 sits cold for now.

All depends on how much your time is worth when it comes to burning wood. I have two girls 5 and 3, so you can see where my time is spent:) . Tht and i figure they won't be able to wield a chainsaw until there at least 10:woohoo:

Hey Everyone,

I have been off here a couple years; guess our information from the old site is not transferred. Anyhow it is good to be back; been a member since Oct 2008. A lot has happened in the last couple years for me; the trusty 6039 has been in moth balls.
But hoping to get it up and running soon. Had a loss of my home and several other bad things happen.(thank you "O"conomy) Good part is, started playing the banjo about a year and a half ago, think I might have the makings of a song.
Anyhoo, good to see some of the familiar members. Think corn prices will really hurt that usage this year, but pellets here in central Indiana are in the $ 175.00 a ton range.

Regards,

Rich C:
