I was also thinking this forum was t!ts up, glad it's up and running again. Good job. I am burning corn from last year and have about 70 bushels left. I might look into pellets at that point.

It's amazing how $7 corn puts a damper on attendance. I didn't even realize the forum was down all summer.

I don't know if it's the $7 corn or not but there are a lot of regulars missing. Kinda like some of the kids left home and forgot to write

Probably my imagination because I don't visit often, but it seems like there was more activity on the old forum.

I agree, the old forum, which I was a newbee seemed to have a lot more talk going on. I think with the drop in NG prices and the rise in prices of pellets and especially corn things have quieted down.

I believe it's temporary though. Corn will probably never come back under $6, but I really believe that other fuels will jump back up. NG is running on the hope and promise of fracking, there are a lot of groups out there that hate it and will do anything to stop it. Even if they only slow it down we are now looking at the U.S. becoming a NG exporter, well we all know what happens when that happens, prices will go up.

More coal fired electric generators being shut down, switching to NG generating, nuclear plants shutting down because of NG prices. Once a nuke is decommissioned it's almost impossible to start it back up under current rules. We are setting ourselves up for major price increases for energy in the next few of years. That's not even considering what crap can happen in the middle east to spike oil prices or even make oil in very short supply.

I'll hold onto my equipment, hope for the best but be ready to burn what ever I have to to save money and stay warm.
